The Student Effect

By MEGAN VANDRE

Just over one year ago, The Cafe, formerly Mama's Cafe, opened its doors under new management. The new owners were determined to find success where three previous owners had failed.

Co-owner Tony DeMille told The Daily Universe then that "students should feel like it's their place." Former owners had not found success, he said, because they "didn't have a pulse on what was happening."

These days The Cafe stands empty. Its banner sign, which was never quite changed from reading "Mama's Cafe," is in disrepair. One wonders if DeMille's ideals ever came true.

Do the students now filing past it every day wonder or care about its fate?

The fact is, The Cafe is not the only student-catering business to come and go in the area. There's also The Station, Mama's Cafe, Soul Kitchen, The Palace and The Ozone, among others.

Although there are 44 Provo businesses licensed under the broad category of entertainment and recreation — which includes everything from TCI Cablevision to rock climbing — the number of businesses modeled as student hangouts seems to be decreasing. Now only a few remain — like Club Omni, Wrapsody, Ozz, Jake's and Johnny B's.

So why the decline?

One club owner said students have a lot to do with it.

"What we hear continually from students is that there's nothing to do in Provo," said Ken Merena, owner of Club Omni. "And yet, they won't support what there is to do. They're not willing to even cover the cost."

Merena says on average from BYU, less than half of 1 percent of the student population is supporting Club Omni on any given night.

He also cites average per capita spending at Club Omni's juice bar as evidence of students' unwillingness to pay for entertainment.

Those averages are, "Friday night, 71 cents. Oh, that's Latin night, though. Thursday night, country night, 33 cents. Wednesday night, when we've got the BYU students in here, 19 cents. And do you know what they're doing? They're sticking their heads under the faucets in the bathrooms and drinking water from there," Merena said. "And, of course, they want everything for free."

He also said students have got retailers to "jump at their behest."

"And the way they do that is, a student won't patronize a local business without a coupon or discount, without some kind of gift," Merena said. "I can give you anecdotal evidence that when we make things free, all we attract are the cheap people that would otherwise not come."

Merena admits that everyone wants something for free, but he says part of the student mentality is cultural. "They have that up at the Wilk. And it's right on campus," he said. "And we can't compete with free."

But BYU doesn't necessarily mean to compete at all.

Paul Warner, director of Student Leadership Services, said BYU has no antagonism toward student-geared businesses.

"My perspective is that the Y doesn't see themselves as a competitor with small businesses, and that they do not have any charge or responsibility to try to send students in any one direction in regards to their actions or buying patterns," Warner said.

Warner said BYU simply tries to perform a service for students who don't have transportation or who live near campus.

The university wants good relations, but can't be partial, he said.

Jonathan Kau, a BYUSA coordinator over clubs, said businesses have an issue with being able to access the student market. That is difficult for them to do on campus because BYU

The volunteer response nature of the survey also made Christensen wonder what type of people would respond.

"It is likely certain subsets of the population like the environmentally conscience would be more apt to respond," said Christensen, who is afraid too much weight may be put on the results if it is published.

"As soon as you put numbers out, most people are going to accept them," he said,

Utah Community Development planner Grant Crowell found the survey ambiguous at times. He said it was too difficult to see the correlation between some scenario proposals. The survey included various proposals for things such as transportation, lot size, infrastructure and pollution.

"Do people realize that by building on all these large lots infrastructure cost like sewer will naturally go up?" Hanson said.

Envision Utah's Public Awareness Manager Julie Hillman said her organization realizes the results will only represent a select portion of those living in the Wasatch Front. She said Envision Utah organizers decided to go with a volunteer survey so everyone would at least have the opportunity to respond.

Before Envision Utah presents its results to the public, Hillman said a more scientific, follow-up survey will be done.

"In the spring we plan to verify and validate this survey. We want to see if the people who responded really reflect (the opinion) of the community," she said.

Hillman said drafting a survey directed to such a broad base of people was a challenging task.

BYU subpoenaed in SLOC scandal

By SETH GIFFORD BLAYLOCK
seth@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

BYU and two other Utah colleges were issued subpoenas Thursday by the U.S. Justice Department, which is currently investigating the Salt Lake Olympic Committee scandal.

The Justice Department is requiring BYU, Utah Valley State College and the University of Utah to submit school records to aid in their investigation.

"BYU has actually received two subpoenas. The first was received the middle of last week, and the second was late Wednesday," said Carri Jenkins, director of Media Communications for BYU.

Jenkins said the Justice Department subpoena requested the transcripts of nine individuals.

One name on the list is Suhel Attarabulsi, son of former International Olympic Committee member Bashir Attarabulsi of Libya.

Bashir, who became a member of the IOC in 1977, resigned Jan. 22. He was the second member of the IOC to resign because of the scandal.

Attarabulsi, who attended the BYU English Language Center, received money for tuition and expenses through a SLOC scholarship, Jenkins said.

Attarabulsi attended the program for three semesters—from the summer of 1995 to spring of 1996—while Salt Lake City was actively bidding for the 2002 games.

When asked about the nature of Attarabulsi's scholarship, Frank Zang, director of Media Relations for SLOC, said Attarabulsi's scholarship was given "under the auspices of the National Olympic Committee Assistance Program that was operated by the bid committee."

Derek Hall, director of College Relations for UVSC, said the Justice Department requested a UVSC transcript for Attarabulsi. The former IOC member's son also attended UVSC during 1995 and 1996.

The English Language Center is a lab school run through BYU, but it is not a part of the university, Jenkins said. Applications to the center are different than applications to the university, and English Language Center courses do not count for college credit.

"The English Language Center is a very separate and distinct program from Brigham Young University," Jenkins said.

BYU must comply with the subpoena by Wednesday.

spectability and notoriid, we are at the same her film festival in the undance Press Secretabal. "But we have a quality of our own, a unique flavor."

Originally known as the U.S. Film Festival, the event began in Salt Lake City in 1978. It was designed as a platform for low-budget films made outside of the Hollywood arena to gain an audience. As the festival grew it became apparent that it needed greater financial backing as well as year-round staff. In 1984, the Sundance Institute, founded by Robert Redford, adopted the festival with the intention of retaining its focus on helping independent filmmakers express their talents.

Some of the success enjoyed by the Sundance Film Festival could be attributed to the resort-like atmosphere it provides.

"Sundance really has a fun feeling about it," Cabal said. "A lot of Southern California movie-makers come here and are really taken out of their element. Everybody is on the same level. They eat together, ride the buses together. It's not uncommon to see an executive producer fall on the ice or go slipping down a hill."

The majority of the Sundance Film Festival is held in Park City, although some showings are held in Salt Lake City, Ogden, Provo or the screening room at the Sundance ski resort. Every year over 10,000 filmmakers come from around the world to see the latest in independent film, or Indies, which unlike movies made at studios, are often funded through private investors.

"Indies provide a creative outlet for filmmakers that can't be achieved at the big studios," Cabal said. "When making an independent film, the director, the production designer, the costume people and everybody can share the same vision. At the big studios some of the artists' vision has to be compromised."

And as Sundance has grown, that artistic vision has proven profitable.

Many of the films which have premiered at Sundance have gone on to both critical acclaim and widespread success. Among these are "Four Weddings and a Funeral,"

American Fork boy under investigation

Associated Press

An American Fork teen-ager has admitted that he sexually assaulted at least 17 boys since the early 1990s, Utah County police say.

Investigators also believe the 15-year-old boy may have sexually assaulted nine more juveniles since 1991 or 1992. The victims' ages range from 1 to 15.

The suspect apparently attacked some children he baby-sat, while the other victims were friends and neighbors, said American Fork police Lt. Andy Hale. The boy told his parents about the assaults, and the family contacted police last week.

"He acknowledged that he had been participating in sexual activities with 17 juveniles," Hale said.

The teen is still with his parents and likely won't be taken into custody until the investigation is finished, Hale said.

"Because he was cooperative and we are not worried that he is going to flee, we have left him in the custody of his parents," Hale said. "We are in the process of interviewing all of the victims."

Officials with the state Division of Child and Family Services are aiding detectives in their investigation.

Morgue cleared of quake victims

ARMENIA, Colombia — Empty coffins were piled high Sunday in the stands of the local basketball arena that served as a makeshift morgue for victims of last week's devastating earthquake. The floor, which had received hundreds of corpses in previous days, was now clear.

On the night the earthquake struck, the basketball court was filled with up to 300 bodies at one time. Two-thirds of the nearly 1,000 people killed in Colombia's earthquake arrived there.

Symbolic of a poorly managed relief operation, the 200 empty coffins in the Quindio state university arena had arrived after most of the dead had already been buried.

Because the coffins sat unnoticed for several days in a warehouse, many grieving relatives were forced to bury their dead in plastic bags.

Chimp studies may 'AID' treatment

CHICAGO — Where did the AIDS virus come from? Scientists believe they have solved this lingering mystery. The answer: chimps.

In a presentation Sunday, researchers from the University of Alabama at Birmingham said they have convincing proof that the virus has spread, on at least three separate occasions, from chimpanzees to people in Africa. One of these cross-species transmissions was the start of the epidemic that now infects about 35 million people worldwide.

Chimps, which have probably carried the virus for hundreds of thousands of years, apparently do not get sick from it. Figuring out why could be important.

"This is excellent science with biological and virological importance. If we understood how the chimp has dealt with this infection over time, that could have implications for human medicine," said Dr. Kevin DeCock, an AIDS expert at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta.

While chimps have long been suspected as the source, "there have been a lot of loose ends that made people uncomfortable drawing that conclusion," said Dr. Beatrice Hahn.

IOC president's fate up to members

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — Describing as "rubbish" some of the personal attacks against him, IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch said Sunday only the committee's members are in a position to judge whether he should stay in office.

Facing continuing calls from outside the IOC for him to resign in connection with the widening Olympic corruption scandal, Samaranch vowed again to remain as long as he has the support of the general IOC membership.

"My obligation is to stay and to put all my efforts to get back the prestige that the IOC had during the last years," Samaranch said in an interview with six news agencies.

The 78-year-old Spaniard announced last week that he would put his leadership to a vote of confidence at a special general assembly March 17-18.

"Maybe some people they are very tired to see me as president after 18 years, mainly some people outside the IOC," Samaranch said. "But I would like to repeat: I put my position to the IOC members. It is up to them. My position belongs to them."

Republican impeachment vote iffy

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Republican senators Sunday said some of their colleagues may vote against removing President Clinton from office. House prosecutors, meanwhile, prepared to question Monica Lewinsky in a last-ditch effort to strengthen their case.

As Lewinsky waited at the Mayflower Hotel for her deposition which begins today, cracks appeared in the unified Republican front on the perjury and obstruction charges against Clinton.

"The sense right now in just listening to members talk is that there are Republicans who either are not going to vote for perjury or the obstruction of justice" charge, Sen. Tim Hutchinson, R-Ark., said in a telephone interview.

Hutchinson declined to estimate how many might vote to acquit, but he indicated that getting even 50 votes for conviction, in a chamber controlled by 55 Republican senators, is in doubt.

doesn't allow advertising from off-campus sources, except in The Daily Universe and similar publications. "They feel we're a closed market," Kau said.

But what happens when the issue is not money, but reputation?

A case in point: During Fall Semester, the Swing Kids club, one of more than 50 BYUSA clubs, wanted to host the band Indigo Swing. Club members looked for the cheapest place for the concert and came up with Club Omni.

Liz Lovelady, then president of Swing Kids, said initially BYUSA quoted a price of $1,600 to use the Wilkinson Center's ballroom. Club Omni said it would do the job for $800, and that included the lighting, sound, hosting staff, security — everything, Lovelady said.

BYU then changed its bid to $500, but Lovelady said Swing Kids was still responsible for the sound and lighting. Her club also had to pay an additional fee to have Guest Services host the event. When only about 280 of the expected 500 people showed up, Swing Kids lost about $2,000.

Lovelady had petitioned BYUSA, through Kau, to have the event at Club Omni to cut costs. But, according to Merena, Kau said BYUSA didn't want Swing Kids to be associated with "that kind of club."

"Basically, BYUSA wouldn't approve it because it was a club," Lovelady said. "BYUSA didn't want to be affiliated with Club Omni because it's a (dance) club and they didn't want the reputation of a club."

Kau said BYUSA would simply not prefer to associate its name with any off-campus business.

Lovelady also said that despite the fact that Club Omni does not serve alcohol, keeps three times the number of city-mandated security guards on duty and was willing to enforce BYU dress and grooming standards, BYUSA could not approve the venture.

"Given that there was a shooting at Club Omni over the break, we felt our concerns were justified," Kau said.

Kau said BYUSA has nothing against the club personally, but that "we'd prefer students to come here."

But, he said, the decision is ultimately for the students.

"We're not trying to be overly protective of our students," Kau said. "(We think) they should be careful in any decision of where to spend their money or time."

"As a private religious school, there are things that might seem conservative and counterintuitive to what students expect," he said. "But BYU has very real concerns."

Kau said some businesses cater to certain clientele, and BYUSA watches that. Lovelady says she can understand that approach.

"It is a different atmosphere from BYU," she said. She said that Club Omni is pushing for BYU to be associated with it, but the two have different standards. This is seen in patron's language and dress and grooming, she said.

But Lovelady also said Club Omni is helping the community by sponsoring a dance program to help get kids off the streets.

Warner, who also sits on the Provo City Council, said in his view, the students patronize off-campus businesses quite a bit.

"It is frustrating to small businesses," he said. "They think (student patrons and BYU support) will save business."

But although opinions differ, one thing is certain: Students do affect the market of the area's small businesses in some ways. But, in the end, their responsibility for the success or failure of hangout spots may not be clear-cut.

something like this, you have to realize you're not going to please everyone," said Hillman, who has fielded complaints from both those who said the survey was too simple and those who said it was too complex.

Hillman said some of the ambiguity on the survey was due to the nature of Envision Utah. As a bipartisan organization, Envision Utah does not want to weigh down growth scenarios with specific details, which Hillman said should be left up to the local and state government.

For example, the survey lists rail as a possible transportation choice in two of its growth scenarios. Hillman said her organization did not want to distinguish between commuter rail or light rail, which are significantly different in cost.

"All of the rail choices were simply generic. It is not in our circle to give recommendations on those kind of specifics," she said.

Provo long-tern planner Vern Keeslar doesn't plan on putting much weight in the survey results, but he said the survey did help him realize the city could get involved in surveys.

With the help of two BYU professors, the Provo Department of Community Development is creating two growth-related surveys that they plan to distribute in February. One will deal with open space issues and the other will focus on traffic.

Keeslar said Envision Utah has also helped to spur more community involvement in growth planning than the city has seen in years. When city officials were putting together the 1997 Provo General plan, 33 public meetings were held. During those 33 meetings, he said less than 500 people participated from the community, which has a population of 110,800.

"People subconsciously care about the community, and they get involved when things get closer to home, which is often time too late," he said.

Hanson said Orem has dealt with growth issues like developing a city center for years. She said the Envision Utah process has helped to make these type of growth issues a priority.

"If it prompts people that have never thought about growth to talk about it as dinner-table conversation, then it has served a good purpose," Hanson said.

Springville's Mayor Hal Wing said the city's $650,000 deficit is now a $3 million surplus.

He was aware the city had financial problems before he was elected last year, but it wasn't until he took office that he realized how serious the problems were.

Wing said the city had been using restricted money for daily expenses. City officials spent $2.8 million that should have been kept in trust accounts, he said.

"It blows me away that state auditors didn't catch the problems," said Wing, who found that some city bills hadn't been paid for over six months.

When Wing took office he promised to examine the city's financial situation and figure out what was wrong. He launched an independent audit of Springville's books last year which revealed the city was $645,055 in the red.

BYU hosts Asian New Year

Food, fashion and dance highlight cultural celebration

By ALI ANDERSON
anderson@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The second annual Asian New Year Festival brought cultural experience to a crowd gathered Friday in the Wilkinson Student Center Ballroom.

"I came to learn more about and celebrate the Asian culture," said Patty Muh, 25, a senior law student from Alhambra, Calif.

"They have a variety of food, costumes and dances from all different Asian countries. It's always a fun event," Muh said.

The celebration began with an Oriental dinner of rice, egg rolls and chicken. Tables of cultural displays allowed students and local residents to view pictures and objects from featured Asian countries.

Clothing styles of China, Vietnam and other countries were also presented in brightly-colored fashion shows throughout the evening, from casual wear to sparkling gowns.

Leng Lee, 24, a sophomore from Milwaukee, Wis., majoring in business, enjoyed the fashion shows because of cultural insight they provided.

"(The fashion shows) give us the flavor of each country. They show us how the Asian people live and dress," Lee said.

Authentic dances from various Asian countries were also performed. Among them were the Chinese lion dance, ribbon dance and drum dance.

LDS returned missionaries who served in Asian countries came to "get a taste of the culture again," said Richard Zollinger, who served his mission in the Korea Teajon Mission.

"I have a love for the Asian people and an interest in the culture of the Orient," said Zollinger, 22, a sophomore from Idaho Falls, Idaho, majoring in business.

Melissa Ovard also attended the Festival because of love she developed for the Asian people while serving her mission in the Korea Pusan Mission. "I love Korea," said Ovard, 22, a junior from Morgan, majoring in English. "I love seeing all the different cultures and the beauty of them all. They are all intertwined somehow, but different at the same time," Ovard said.

The Asian New Year Festival was hosted by the BYU Student Leadership Programming Team.

"I love the Boy Scouts and have volunteered with them in order to make a name for myself," she said.

Myers worked at Hawk Mountain Scout Reservation in Pennsylvania last summer as a Cub Scout leader and a BB gun director.

Birgitte Clawson, 20, a senior from Amarillo, Texas, majoring in recreation management youth leadership, is working for the Boy Scouts at the Florida Sea Base. She is an assistant to the program director in preparation for the summer season.

She said it is nice to be able to see if she really likes this kind of work now, before she graduates.

Many agencies continue to come to BYU for recruits because of the quality of the RMYL Department and the work ethic of the students.

"The BYU students we recruit are exactly the type of employees we want," Jim Schwieger, program director at the Florida Sea Base, said.

He said the department also makes recruiting easy by keeping a good relationship with him.

"They are kind of recruiting us to recruit their students," he said. "If I could go to only one school in the country, I would recruit at BYU."

New courses added: the class struggle continues at BY

SNIDE REMARKS

By ERIC D. SNIDER
NewsNet Columnist

In its ongoing attempt to provide an education that will be useful and practical in terms of day-to-day living, BYU has recently added several new courses to its catalog. Since "Snide Remarks" is, at its heart, a public service column — it recently won the Nobel Peace Prize, for example — I thought I'd share some of these new classes with you.

Sociology 366: "The Self-Righteous Stare." Teaches the right time to give fellow students BYU's patented Self-Righteous Stare — upon seeing someone purchase caffeine, upon seeing a man with facial hair, upon hearing someone admit to having seen an R-rated movie, etc. Emphasizes that prior to giving the Stare, one must already feel superior. Prerequisite: Sociology 365, "How to Feel Superior."

P.E. 129: "Register for This Class, Get an 'A,' and Forget About P.E. for the Rest of Your Life." Emphasizes the need to register for a P.E. class. Discusses various methods of registering: e.g., over the phone, with an add/drop card, etc. Attendance, studying and/or learning not required. Prerequisite: You must have a name.

Statistics 221.5: "Forgetting Everything You Learned in Statistics 221." Once students have spent an entire semester going to Statistics 221 nine hours a week, plus doing another 10 hours of homework, it becomes necessary to take this course, designed to help students purge the frivolous and unnecessary statistics information from their brains so they can go back to thinking about other things. Focus is on talking to friends, going on dates, and watching TV. Failure to take this course may result in that useless information staying in students' brains forever, which may result in students obtaining the only job in which a knowledge of statistics is helpful: that of a statistics teacher.

Sociology 182: "Freshman Behavior." For beginning BYU students, this course discusses how to behave in such a way as to let everyone know that you are a freshman. Topics include: wearing high school letterman jackets, going to Garrens shows, going to Homecoming dances, walking around the library with those headphones as you take the "library tour," wearing shorts in the winter, quoting Monty Python sketches. Prerequisite: high school, or its equivalent.

The final edition of "Snide Remarks" will appear next Monday.

English 201: "Old, Boring Literature." Stories and poems written several thousand years ago, featuring themes and characters so archaic one wonders if indeed they were even written by human beings. Several papers required, all of which must be at least as boring as the texts they analyze. Any ancient literature which may prove to be interesting or valuable will be skipped. Prerequisite: English 115, "How to Read."

American Hritage 100: "What, You Didn't Pass the A.P. Test in High School?" Focuses on things about American history that you already know.

Theater & Media Arts 109: "Being a Theater Person." For theater majors only. Discusses how to make every-day events such as not finding a parking space seem melodramatic; how to walk around the HFAC reciting lines and/or singing songs at full voice, hoping people will notice you; how to avoid taking any non-theater classes; how to determine the fine line between looking "cool" as you wear only thrift-store clothes, and looking "poor" as you wear only thrift-store clothes; and how to convince your spouse that he or she should get a regular job and support you because you refuse to do anything other than act for a living. Prerequisite: Theater & Media Arts 108, "Getting Attention."

Theater & Media Arts 201: "Quoting Movies." Helps students put lines from "Princess Bride" and "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" into their everyday vocabulary, thus enabling them to converse with other BYU students. Films such as "Tommy Boy" and the "Star Wars" trilogy are also discussed. Includes a unit on the proper ti... "Inconceivable!" with a lisp, and th... debate over whether they are the Kn... Say "Neek!" or the Knights Who So... Prerequisite: Communications 203, 0... You're Funny Just Because You Su... thing That Was Funny in a Movie."

Maceo Parker to perform in SLC

By AMY KNUDTSON
knudtson@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Maceo Parker, alto saxophonist and funk original, will be performing at the Zephyr Club in Salt Lake City, tonight at 10. Tickets are available at the door, or by calling (801) 355-5646.

Parker recently released his album, "Funkoverload," a soulful, booty-shaking collection with the music of jazz and funk.

The music is not anything to interpret, it is made entirely for the purpose of feeling it in your body and getting down.

And get down is what you feel like doing when you hear his original music rubbing shoulders with covers of other famous "soul men."

Besides a romance-rap version of Marvin Gaye's "Let's Get it On," Maceo and his crew lay into some other grooves, such as Sly and the Family Stones "Sing a Simple Song," and Rufus' classic "Tell me Something Good," along with an organ version of another Gaye classic "Inner City Blues."

Parkers songs provide the perfect foundation for the funk he delivers on the horn. The power of his saxophone is undiminished, and truly the best part of the album. His vocals are not bad either, he adds his voice to the album, lending a Chuck Brown kind of sound.

Parker's son, Corey, joins his dad in providing the raps throughout the album. He gives refreshing sound and colorfully enhances the albums youthful appearance. He uses catchy phrases that again, make you want to get up and dance.

"Time to set it off, sweat it off, get on the floor. Everybody move ya body. We wanna see you bounce around the club, take you back to when it was funk as pure as a dove, from day one, the architect with the funk blueprint," Corey said in the song "Maceo's Groove."

Parker is good at making music, and has been doing it for the past 30 years. He mastered the art of the groove while a band leader for James Brown, and while working with George Clinton's P-Funk Mothership. Since then he has continued to search for his unique style in bands such as Horny Horns, Maceo and the Macks and the JB's.

He started his solo career in 1990, and since then has found a funk mix all his own. That is, with the help of his band members. He is accompanied by trombonist Fred Wesley, a colleague of Parkers since they played together in JB's.

"Those kinds of relationships you cherish," Parker said when thinking of the work and time the two have shared.

Parker has appeared on records by artists such as George Clinton, De La Soul and Janes Addiction. He spent last spring headlining the Second Annual "Funk and Music Festival" and last fall on a mid-west run with Dave Matthews Band.

Parker obviously enjoys the music that he so easily puts his heart and soul into. "Funkoverload" is hot, entertaining and full of grooves that anyone could enjoy. After listening to the album, it will instantly become a favorite.

Documentary to celebrate Black History Month

By AMBER FURST

KUED will show a six-hour documentary series called "I'll Make Me a World" featuring the creative achievements of African-Americans in this century today through Wednesday.

According to Cindy Gubler, media consultant with the Utah Humanities Council, the series launchs KUED's celebration of Black History Month. The series shows two one-hour segments each evening at 8 and 9.

The series will begin with the contributions of African-Americans starting with the beginning of the 20th century and progress chronologically up to today.

The series will feature interviews and insights from legends to lesser-known artists. Alice Walker, Spike Lee, Gwendolyn Brooks and Quincy Jones are some of the guests who will offer insights on impact of African-Americans in America.

The Utah Humanities Council, a non-profit organization dedicated to promoting the understandings of human tradition, is promoting the documentary and offers free books and videos by African-American artists.

"The documentary will provide an extraordinary opportunity to promote dialogue across cultures and generations on vital social issues. This is a way for us to meet our neighbors and really see ourselves," said Cynthia Buckingham, executive producer.

Quintina Brown, president of the BYU club, the Black Student Union, from Orem, believes that this documentary will help tear down stereotypes.

"African-Americans have had a tremendous influence on the arts, whether it be music, film or literature. Hopefully this series will help people appreciate and recognize these achievements. This show will ... help document and celebrate America's cultural diversity," Brown said.

More information about the series is available at http://www.blackside.com.

orward Alisha Griffeth left fans at the Marriott Center entire New Mexico bench uths agape as the Cougars e Lobos 73-55 Saturday.

n, who has averaged only tes per game this season, fire, hitting 6-9 from the 1 5-7 from the three-point 19 points were matched by e Cady Williams, who also contributed a game-high nine rebounds.

"This was a gigantic win for us," head coach Trent Shippen said. "This next week will be big for us as well and give us a chance to get one more step toward winning the Pacific Division."

The Cougars (12-7, 6-1) came back from a 10-point deficit and dismal first half with an incredible defensive effort that shut down the Lobos. Shooting 47 percent in the first half, New Mexico was held to just 18.5-percent shooting in the second — a season best for BYU defensively. The Lobos (14-4, 5-2) found the basket only five times in 27 attempts.

"That was the key," said head coach Trent Shippen. "Our defense really stepped up tonight. It all started with Amanda (Covington) who started the second half with an aggressive defense."

With Megan Jensen (knee), Lori Henry-Cuff (virus) and Renae Hansen (knee) all out of the lineup, the Cougars just did what they've done all season — look to their bench.

"Coach told us (playing without Megan, Lori and Renae) brought out the best in us," Williams said.

That was apparent in the second half when the Cougars scored 45 points with 47-percent shooting.

Losing a 9-8 advantage early in the first half, BYU finally found the lead again on an inside shot from Lindsay Van Komen that put the Cougars up 39-38 with 13:45 remaining.

The Lobos missed 11 straight shots before finally finding the basket 11 minutes into the half. From there they were outscored 26-12 as the Cougars built and 18 point advantage. In that stretch, Griffeth delivered 16 points.

"We did a good job breaking their press and that left me wide open," Griffeth said.

In only her second collegiate meet, Parkinson led the team and the meet in scoring with a 38.975 overall.

Being a freshman, Parkinson was unaware of the rarity of BYU winning an all-around competition against Utah.

Parkinson, however, isn't letting the win go to her head.

"Winning the all-around is a big accomplishment for me," she said. "I am happy with hitting four for four, but there are some little things that still need to change."

Cattermole said he was happy with Parkinson's performance, predicting that in time she will beat the school record for all-around scores.

Before coming to BYU, Parkinson was on the national team and competed in Australia, Italy and Guatemala. While competing in Guatemala in 1997, she took second all-around.

Of the entire team, Cattermole said there are little mistakes that will come out with time. The coach accredits part of the team's problems to both a young squad and injuries that are keeping the more experienced women out of competition.

At the beginning of the year, Cattermole said he thought his team could have beaten Utah like it did last year. But as team members began to drop with injuries and illness, reality set in.

"When you look at a team at the beginning of the year and you know you can do it, then you lose some, it's hard," Cattermole said.

oleman continued his pinning ways and new- ssell Brunson burst onto the scene with an victory to help the BYU wrestling team stretch g streak to three with a dominating 34-9 win tate Fullerton in the Smith Fieldhouse on Satur- oon.

Coleman didn't waste any time, pinning Ryan in the second period, and BYU never looked eman is on a roll, having pinned his last three starting with the Fresno State meet on Jan. 23.

d coach Mark Schultz said he was pleased with mental toughness and physical condition.

"Coleman has adapted a style that makes the most of his physical attributes," he said. "What can I say, the guy's a stud."

Coleman admitted that three pins in a row isn't a common occurrence in collegiate wrestling.

"I haven't ever seen it happen," he said. "Every match is a tough match in college. I think we have some really good competition in the (wrestling) room to help me get prepared."

Freshman Russell Brunson's first collegiate match ended in a technical fall (16-point advantage) Saturday with a Cal State Fullerton wrestler on the bad end of the deal.

Brunson's wrestling partner in practice, Gary Sanderson, said he has not been surprised by Brunson's success.

"He's tough as nails. I've been working out with him and he stepped up big (Saturday). He's a true freshman and he's been working hard," he said.

Broncos dance past Falcons

Associated Press

MIAMI — What a perfect way for John Elway to say goodbye.

The man who spent his first 14 NFL seasons without a Super Bowl ring got his second straight Sunday, weaving his magic for what could be the final time and gaining revenge on former coach and adversary Dan Reeves and his upstart Atlanta Falcons.

The final score was 34-19 over an Atlanta team that was its own worst enemy. The 38-year-old Elway, who was the unanimous choice for MVP, completed 18 of 29 passes for 336 yards and one touchdown and ran three yards for another score. The total yardage was third best in Super Bowl history.

Elway refused to say whether he would retire or come back for a chance to win a third-straight Super Bowl.

"I'm going to take some time, relish this year," he said. "You got to love those challenges. We got the team, we got the nucleus here to do it. It definitely throws a kink into my thinking."

In addition to the Falcons, who did everything they could to self-destruct on offense, Elway's accomplices were:

— Darrien Gordon, who intercepted two passes that set up two scores and set a Super Bowl record with 108 yards in interception returns.

— Fullback Howard Griffith, who had two 1-yard TD runs.

— Terrell Davis, the league MVP, who carried 25 times for 102 yards and his seventh-consecutive postseason 100-yard game, breaking an NFL record set by John Riggins.

— Wide receiver Rod Smith, who caught five passes for 152 yards and an 80-yard touchdown.

Despite the absence of tight end Shannon Sharpe, who injured a knee in the first quarter, Smith and the other Denver receivers consistently burned Eugene Robinson, the Atlanta safety who was arrested Saturday night on charges of soliciting sex from an undercover police officer.

All that helped Denver become the first team to win two straight Super Bowls since Dallas did it in 1993 and 1994 and the first AFC team to win two straight since Pittsburgh won in 1979 and 1980.

But for all the Broncos did, the game turned on what the Falcons didn't do — getting only six points on their first six forays into Denver territory. Their first TD came on rookie Tim Dwight's 94-yard kickoff return with 11 minutes left in the game.

On the others, Jamal Anderson was dumped for a 2-yard loss on fourth and one from the Broncos' 26, Morten Andersen missed a 28-yard field goal, and Chris Chandler threw an interception to Gordon.

In all, Chandler threw three interceptions, two picked off by Gordon, who also had two in the AFC championship game.

The game turned on one of those failures with five minutes left in the second quarter.

Atlanta moved to the Denver 8, but couldn't convert on third and goal. Then Andersen, one of only two kickers with more than 400 career field goals, missed a 26-yard attempt.

On the next play, Smith raced by Ronnie Bradford and Robinson and caught the ball in stride for an 80-yard score that made it 17-3.

The Atlanta loss was the fourth defeat for Reeves as a Super Bowl coach, the first three with Denver in 1987, 1988 and 1990. In each of those games, he said, his teams played nowhere near their potential.

That certainly was true Sunday with the Falcons, who won the AFC West with a 14-2 record after going 3-13 two years ago, the year before Reeves took over.

But even if Denver's offense hadn't self-destructed, the Falcons would have had problems because the defense just couldn't stop Elway. Denver scored on six of its first 10 possessions and was stopped twice because Jason Elam missed field goals.

Elway was intercepted on the other possession and the Broncos punted just once during that quarter.

Dwight returned the opening kickoff to his own 37 and the Falcons went 48 yards in 10 plays to set up Andersen's 32-yard field goal that gave them a 3-0 lead. They got as far as the 8, but Bill Romanowski sacked Chandler on third down.

The Broncos responded with an 80-yard, 10-play drive capped by Griffith's 1-yard dive for a touchdown. The key play was a 41-yard Elway pass to Smith on third and seven from the Denver 35.

In addition to Wesley's team high 24 points and seven rebounds, Mark Bigelow added 15, while Todd Christensen and Silester Rivers finished with eight each.

Saturday's loss to New Mexico dropped the Cougars to 8-11 overall, and 3-4 in WAC play.

As the Cougars prepare to take on the Utes this weekend, many players realize the changes that need to take place in order to pick up a win.

"We need to play with a lot more intensity," Wesley said.

Y fine-tunes game in exhibition

By GREGORY BENNETT
gregory@du2.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

Going into last weekend's two exhibition matches with the University of Winnipeg, the BYU men's volleyball team had some simple goals. One was to go deep into its bench and give many players time on the floor. The other was to win two matches.

The third-ranked Cougars accomplished these goals by taking both matches from the defending Canadian national champions while playing 12 of their 15 roster players.

"We were able to go pretty deep into our bench," BYU head coach Carl McGown said. "A lot of people played well. Everyone that got in contributed."

Although the matches do not count on the Cougars' overall record, the team went for blood in Friday's match and cruised to a 3-0 win, 15-5, 15-10, 15-5.

"I'm in awe of the way we played tonight," McGown said after Friday's match. "I think it was spectacular. There are lots and lots of reasons why we wouldn't play hard in this match. There are also lots of reasons why we should play hard, but it is easy to focus on reasons not to. Our guys didn't do that. They came out here and took care of business."

And perhaps the best part for McGown and the Cougars was that it was a total team effort. Ten different BYU players recorded kills, with outside-hitters Ingo Lindemann and Ossie Antonetti leading the team with 11 each. All-American middle-hitter Ryan Millar was also in double figures with 10.

Saturday's match was different, however.

Although the outcome was the same, McGown wasn't as pleased with the Cougars' performance in the second match, in which BYU defeated Winnipeg by the identical score of 3-0.

"We certainly weren't inspired tonight," McGown said after Saturday's match. "(Friday) we played at a high emotional level. That was not the case tonight."

Despite the lack of enthusiasm, McGown still recognized positive points from the win.

"We still had parts where we were pretty good," McGown said. "I am pleased that we can still be pretty good when we aren't inspired."

The lack of inspiration may have been the cause for the Cougars' lapse at the end of the match.

After winning the first two games 15-9 and 15-7, BYU led 13-5 in the third game. However, Winnipeg took advantage of serving mistakes and what McGown called a lack of concentration to eventually tie the game 14-14 before the Cougars finally scored the last two points of the match and took the game 16-14.

Track teams make presence known

By TRISHA BARKER and DREW PACKHAM

The BYU women's track and field team swept five dual meets in Idaho Friday and competed Saturday at the Wilson Motor Indoor Open in Logan.

Head track and field coach Craig Poole said he was pleased with the team's effort, but felt the times could have been better.

"The times were not great," Poole said. "It's always hard when you're running twice in one weekend, and the track at Utah State is hard to run on. Most of all, I was pleased with their competitive spirit."

The Cougars brought home six first-place and five second-place finishes at the Idaho State Invitational Friday.

BYU competed against Long Beach State, Utah State, Idaho State and Boise State in separate dual meets and won all five match-ups.

"Most of all, I was pleased with the performances by Treva Bryant, Lindsay Jones, Maika Nelson and the pole vaulters," Poole said. "The sprinters ran well, but not the best that we've ever seen."

At the Wilson Motor Indoor Open on Saturday, Poole said it was apparent the runners were tired.

"We did pretty good, but we had some kids that hit the hurdles and got scraped up," he said.

The BYU men's track and field team continued its steady improvement as its athletes dominated their two meets this weekend.

Friday saw the Cougars sweep four different schools at the Idaho State Invitational in Pocatello, Idaho, while Saturday the team travelled to Logan and performed well in the Wilson Motor Indoor Open.

Head coach Willard Hirschi said he is very impressed with the improvements the athletes are making.

"We looked good at both competitions," Hirschi said. "We're getting sharp and guys are really starting to come around. We're starting to be real consistent with our marks."

One man who gave a lift to the team was Kenneth Andam, last year's WAC Freshman of the Year. The sophomore sprinter filled the void left by Leonard Myles-Mills, who was home resting a sore knee. This weekend marked the first action for Andam, who just returned from visiting his native Ghana.

He showed no signs of rust, however, winning the 60-meter dash on Friday and taking second in the 55 on Saturday. Taking first in that race was Andam's brother Felix, a former BYU sprinter. To round out his weekend, Andam also took top honors in the long jump with a jump of 22-10.

IceCats shoot way to pair of weekend wins

By TRICIA GARNER

The Provo IceCats hockey team continued its winning ways Friday and Saturday, beating division rivals University of New Mexico and Montana State University to extend its winning streak to four.

Boosted by the return of suspended center Bart Harris, the IceCats dealt New Mexico its third-straight loss, by an 8-2 margin, Friday night and came back Saturday to defeat Montana State 7-4. The wins improved the IceCats to 7-4-1 this season.

"We had two good games. It's great to be on the ice again," Harris said. Friday's game was Harris' first this season due to a suspension dating back to last year's playoffs.

Though he said he felt a little rusty, Harris didn't show it, recording two goals and five assists in his first weekend back.

The dominance of the IceCats' line was the story this weekend. Harris, his brother Tylor and right-winger Haakon Johnson combined for nine goals and nine assists in both games.

Freshman Tylor Harris was on fire Friday night, scoring three goals and recording two assists in the victory.

"I just played and had fun. Sometimes it just bounces in your favor," he said.

Chris Wilson/Daily Universe

The IceCats' Dan Baker slips the puck past Montana State's goalie in the team's 7-4 victory Saturday at Seven Peaks Ice Arena.

Johnson picked up where Tylor Harris left off Saturday night, scoring the first three goals of the game to permanently pull the momentum in the IceCats' favor.

The IceCats said the victories are a good starting point in their preparation for the challenging remainder of their season.

"Confidence is high right now," Johnson said. "We want to go to nationals, and to do that we've going to have to work hard and try and win the rest of our games."

The IceCats take on fourth-ranked USC Friday night.

Black History Month for all students

By DIXIE KOLDITZ
NewsNet Staff Writer

Today Black History Month begins. It is a celebration founded by Dr. Carter Goodwill Woodson in 1926 as Negro History Week.

Woodson is known as the father of Negro History.

According to the Multimedia Encyclopedia, Negro History Week was started by Woodson in order to show the contributions of African Americans in U.S. history.

Woodson chose February because President Abraham Lincoln, who abolished slavery, and Frederick Douglas, the first black citizen to hold a high ranking position in the U.S. government, were born in February.

Woodson was concerned that blacks were dehumanized and not treated as citizens. They were treated this way because people at the time thought blacks had not made any significant contributions to society.

Woodson decided to do research on the African experience in America and throughout the world. He researched contributions from both black and white scholars.

"Black history month is about giving people their rightful place in society," said Jim Slaughter, programming advisor for Multicultural Student Services.

He said celebrations planned in the month at BYU, including a performance by visiting African dancers, will help dispel stereotypes.

"The vision is to involve African culture because that is where the roots of African Americans' lay," Slaughter said.

The involvement of African students will help bring a different perspective to Black History Month.

Brian Mitchell, faculty advisor to the Black Student Union, said he was excited with the progress it is making.

The Black Student Union is reaching more people and the numbers of people who attend its events are increasing every year.

He remembered when BYU had about 50 black students in 1988.

"We all fellowshiped each other and were a tight group, but now we are reaching out to everyone," Mitchell said.

The BYU Black History Month celebrations will always include African students, Mitchell said.

Carbohydrates and health debated

By KATHRYN SORENSON
NewsNet Staff Writer

Fat doesn't make you fat, according to Drs. Michael and Mary Eades, authors of "Protein Power."

In 1988 the Surgeon General recommended that Americans reduce their intake of fat, which resulted in a high-carbohydrate diet. "That diet doesn't work," wrote the Eadeses.

"There is a lot of truth that gets mixed in with incorrect ideas," said BYU sports nutritionist Stacey Richins. "What we need is a balance of all three groups: carbohydrates, proteins and fats."

In their book, the Eadeses argue it is actually the high level of carbohydrates in a person's diet that cause people to gain weight and make today's health problems worse.

Carbohydrates stimulate the body's insulin level, which the body uses to store and convert fat into cholesterol. The Eadeses conclude it is the high insulin level in the body that causes obesity and unhealthy levels of cholesterol.

"There are a lot of people trying this protein diet and it's true people have lost weight from it. If losing weight is all they care about then fine, but if people want to be healthy this is not where it's at. If this was such a profound discovery, then the government would have been all over it. So far nothing has changed and I doubt it will.

"If we look at athletes who load up on carbohydrates before a competition, we see that they are not fat. Just because the insulin level increases, doesn't mean that all the carbohydrates are going to be stored as fat. Carbohydrates are where the body gets most of its energy to run," Richins said.

"The key is a balance in all things," said BYU golfer Matthew Thurmond, a senior majoring in English, from Burlington, Wash. "The Word of Wisdom is definitely carbohydrate oriented; there must be a reason for that."

When considering a healthy diet Richins suggests following the recommendations found in the food guide pyramid.

"There's nothing new. It's all found in the food guide pyramid. Our bodies need the nutrients found in all foods, even carbohydrates, to remain healthy. When looking for new information on nutrition, look at books that have the initials, RD, meaning registered dietician. They are the nutrition experts," Richins said.

Separation strengthens family ties

By JILL DAVIES
Universe Staff Writer

Out of necessity, most students leave their families to attend BYU.

Of the 32,202 daytime students enrolled at BYU during Fall Semester 1998, less than 28 percent were from Utah, according to a geographical origin report by Institutional Studies. A total of 1,325 students came from countries outside the United States.

Students' ability to adapt to the university setting depends on their family relationships, said Pat Bran, assistant manager of Helaman Halls and director of the resident hall association executive council.

"I think a lot of how (students) make the adjustment depends on their family and how supportive their families are and how much their families encourage them to step out and be autonomous," she said.

Approximately 500 students discontinue their enrollment at BYU each semester, said Alice Harrison, head of the discontinuance office.

"There are some, usually at the first of the semester (who leave because of homesickness). They come for a few days and miss home. A lot of them won't even admit that they're leaving because of homesickness. They don't realize it themselves," Harrison said.

Jane Lawson, a psychologist at the Counseling and Career Center, said the separation from family BYU students experience helps them develop a new relationship with their parents.

"One of the things that happens when people come to college is they are working on becoming more independent from parents. Their relationships are changing," she said. "They begin to relate to their parents more adult to adult."

Adam Ward, 19, a freshman from Phoenix, Ariz., majoring in economics, said he is happy to be away from his family.

"Coming and going as you please was not something that was allowed at my house during high school. It's nice to make your own choices."

Ward, who grew up with four sisters, said he has easily adjusted to life with roommates. As president of his floor during his first semester at BYU, Ward helped organize floor prayer and scripture reading Sunday through Thursday nights.

Ward said individuals must have some time living away from their families in order to make the transition from dependent to provider.

"Before you are able to have other people dependent on you, you need to be able to depend on yourself," he said.

Ward said he talks with his family at least once a week on the phone and is taking a class with his older sister who also attends BYU.

Tamie Hall, 20, a junior from Provo, majoring in Near Eastern studies, lived in both on- and off-campus housing and studied at the Jerusalem Center, but now lives with her family.

"It's kind of my last chance — a neat chance because I really have changed as a person — to get to know (my family) better," she said. "I get to help put my brothers to bed, sing them to sleep and help them with their homework. It's also been good to be able to help my mom cook dinner or run errands. It's been so rewarding."

Hall said it took leaving home to make her family her first priority.

She said she enjoyed the social aspects of living away from home, but struggled with the insensitivity of others toward her desire to live away from home because they were homesick. She learned things living away from home she couldn't have otherwise, she said.

"I've switched from being critical to finding the positive in my family. I've also become interested in my parents as people."

Living in the foreign language housing — two miles away from his parents' home — Seth Rogers said he returns home at least two times each week to do laundry, borrow the car or use the printer to write letters.

Jill Davies/Daily Universe

Rogers, a junior majoring in international law and diplomacy, lived at home while getting his associate's degree at UVSC, but said he adjusted to living away from home during his mission in Fukuoka, Japan.

"I think the mission lifestyle is nurturing and supportive enough as opposed to college life that it's like a training program for going at it alone — you don't have to worry about money coming in or where you will live."

Living at home requires a trade-off, Rogers said.

"It's a lot more convenient in terms of finance — you save money — but you have to put up with people you've lived with your whole life and who may be very involved in what you're doing."

Leaving her family in Paris, France, Candice Jones said she came to BYU apprehensive about what the atmosphere would be like.

Jones, 19, a sophomore with a double major in economics and French, said she has become very close to her family while living abroad. At BYU she has become self-reliant, she said.

"All of a sudden, you don't have family scripture study or family prayer, so I had to do my own prayer and scripture study and sit down and counsel myself and ask the Lord what I should do in my life."

Jones said she writes daily e-mails to her family and talks with them on the phone an hour each week. Limiting their time talking on the telephone, especially her freshman year, has helped her adjust, she said.

"I didn't not call because the rates were expensive. I think in a way my parents were trying to distance me so I would be able to concentrate here and adjust.'

Jones also visits members of her extended family who live in the Wasatch Front area.

"It's like a taste of home. (My relatives) give me advice; they parent me. They help me make big decisions. It's just such a basic comfort to have family nearby."

Jones said during her first year, while living in the dorms, she relied more on church programs like family home evening to create a family-like atmosphere. Now in off-campus housing, her roommates are like her family, she said.

"We share our work together like a family would. We've become more independent and mature. We're family for each other."

New closure on I-1

Leaving Salt Lake will become harder today when the 500 South on-ramp closes until the spring of 2001.

"The on-ramp is vital to those individuals who are leaving downtown Salt Lake and traveling toward Utah County," said Michael Mowers, a spokesman for Wasatch Constructors.

Joe Walker, of the Utah Department of Transportation, said the alternative routes are 600 North and 900 South.

"These routes will be able to handle the channel of traffic ex to flow through the area," he

Four months ago 600 opened to help with the being rerouted to the area of the 500 South closure.

Walker encourages people the 600 North on-ramp can handle more traffic flowing through the area time.

"Smoke Signals," "High Art," "Reality Bites," "Sliding Doors" and "Hoop Dreams." In 1996, "Shine" premiered at Sundance and went on to be nominated for seven Academy Awards, including best picture.

This year's festival includes 118 films including shorts, documentaries and features which were selected from over 800 entries worldwide.

According to the Sundance Institute, the film festival has recently become more about distribution than it has in past years.

The Los Angeles Times reports that deals have been made up to the $6 million range for distribution rights to certain Sundance films this year. And the lucrative nature of the business has been bringing the celebrities in masses.

This year alone, Sundance films have featured celebrities such as Kate Winslet, Ethan Hawke, Alec Baldwin, Ally Sheedy and Val Kilmer, among others. Past festivals have honored stars such as Nicholas Cage and Denzel Washington.

And the attention is good for the local economy as well.

"The film festival is great for business. We are constantly hosting big groups of people during the film festival," said Laurie Smith, a sales and marketing assistant at the Sundance ski resort. "The shuttles are constantly coming and going and the lodging stays pretty booked."

Park City's resorts also pack their slopes, clubs and restaurants with film fanatics enjoying the entertainment and outdoors. Stan Bishop, a local filmmaker, says it's almost getting to be too much.

"It's getting crazy," he said. "Lately it's been such a big deal that it's almost too crowded."

But all the attention and the crowds are just what the organizers at the Sundance Institute hope for.

Nourse anchored in success

NewsNet Services

35 years of experience in journalism have made Dick Nourse one of the most watched news anchors in Mountain America. Nourse began working for KSL-TV in 1964 and has been there ever since.

Dick Nourse

Nourse, a BYU alumnus, will speak February 1 at 11 a.m. in the Varsity Theatre as part of Wellness Week. But what can Dick Nourse share about wellness and health? A lot of first-hand experience.

Early in his career Nourse was diagnosed with prostate cancer. Through the difficult time, Nourse tried to keep a positive attitude.

"I surrounded myself with people who had been there," said Nourse, "I learned as much as I could about the disease and its treatments... and I kept trying them."

Nourse's popularity was also a help in his fight against cancer, as people sent him information on the disease.

"I was fortunate to be well-known," said Nourse. "People, in their strong concern, helped me through."

Nourse opted to have his prostate removed and shortly recovered from cancer. His positive attitude and efforts paid off. In 1989 he was honored by President Reagan as an outstanding survivor of cancer.

Dick Nourse continues the fight against cancer by sharing what he has learned with his community.

Nourse will speak on the status of medicine today, where it has come from and where it is going.

"We've come a long way," said Nourse, "I believe in our system and efforts, they don't work the same for everyone, but they worked for me."

Vidmar to speak on 'perfect 10'

NewsNet Services

Olympic Gold Medalist Peter Vidmar will perform and share his Olympic experience on Tuesday at 1 and 2 p.m in the Garden Court. Vidmar will speak on ways to go beyond just physical fitness goals. He will perform on the pommel horse, the apparatus on which he won a gold medal in the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

Peter Vidmar

Vidmar is the highest scoring United States male gymnast in Olympic history. In 1984, as U.S.A. gymnastics team captain, he led his team to win the gold medal. He is the only American male to win the silver medal in the all-around competition. Vidmar scored a perfect 10 and won another gold medal on the pommel horse. He is a member of the U.S. Olympic Hall of Fame.

"Too many people reflect on their past and decide if they can't be as active as they were in college then they are aren't even going to try and they just give up," Vidmar said.

Vidmar relates his theory on how physical fitness relates to charity.

"If you take good care of yourself you will be able to take care of others as well. If you don't you won't," Vidmar said.

BYUSA will sponsor a massage booth and special Live at the Terrace activities for Wellness Week.

New You Therapeutic Massage will provide free massage therapy daily during Wellness Week from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Garden Court. Liz Eyring, program director for Live at the Terrace, said the program usually showcases local bands, but they wanted to do something different for Wellness Week.

Dr. Virgil Parker will speak Monday at 3 p.m. in the Little Theater 3380 WSC.

Parker will speak to missionaries who served in Third World countries and how they can prevent illnesses.

There are five important things to do when traveling in underdeveloped nations. First, always find out immunizations necessary for the area, and recieve those immunizations. Second, always wash your hands. Third, never drink water if its source is unknown. Fourth, sterilize all fruits and vegetables. Fifth, use common sense.

"I have traveled to the South Pacific and the Eastern Bloc countries, and, generally speaking, medicine is substandard in those countries, compared to medicine in the developed countries," Parker said.

Safe Weight Management

One out of every five women at BYU suffers from an eating disorder, according to a survey taken by a BYU professor in the early '90s.

Dr. Harold Frost from the Center for Change in Orem said the statistic is not only accurate but a typical statistic on college campuses across the nation.

"Safe Weight Management," taught by dietitian Susan Fullmer, will be Tuesday at 10 a.m. in 3211 WSC.

Fullmer will discuss popular diets and why they might not be healthy or safe and how to distinguish the right way to lose weight from the recent craze diets.

Fullmer said her class will touch on eating disorders but will concentrate mostly on dieting and the healthy way to lose weight.

My Experiences as a Female MD

At a time when more women are entering into professional careers, many are still striving to uphold their roles as mothers.

In a discussion Tuesday at 10 a.m. in 3380 ELWC, Elizabeth Blackwell, a physician at the Student Health Center, will address concerns about LDS women trying to be professionals, specifically in the medical field, and raise a family as well.

"It's worked for me," said Blackwell, a mother of four children ages 13 to 19. "I have no regrets and there have been blessings along the way."

Blackwell received her bachelor of science degree in biology at Upsala College in New Jersey. She converted to the LDS Church while attending Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia. She then received training at the Good Samaritan Hospital in Phoenix.

Risks for Developing Breast Cancer

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of every nine women will get breast cancer during their lives. After lung cancer, it is the second most common cancer women die from. Even college students need to be aware of breast cancer, Tara Avena, American Cancer Society area program director for Provo, said. If women become educated about breast cancer early in their lives, they are more likely to recognize the warning signs.

"Breast cancer can occur at a young age, and usually, the cancer is very aggressive. It is important that students know how to recognize the cancer because it can develop a lot quicker," Avena said.

Dr. Craig Morrison of BYU's McDonald Health Center will speak at 1 p.m. in 3380 WSC about the risk factors of breast cancer, the differnt types of the cancer, and how it is treated.

Spiritual Wellness

John Bytheway will speak Feb 3 at 1 p.m in the Varsity Theater as part of Wellness Week. His topic will be "The Spiritual Aspect of Wellness."

Bytheway, who is a popular youth speaker and author of several books, will focus his presentation on ways members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints can get more out of their Sunday meetings.

"I will talk about the different responsibilities of those in the classroom," Bytheway said. "Both the teacher and the learner have a role in getting the most out of the lesson."

Bytheway has worked 11 years for BYU Continuing Education, and is currently a part-time instructor in Religious Education at BYU.

He presently teaches three sections of Book Of Mormon.

Enhancing Wellbeing Through Service

Rae Jeanne Memmott, associate professor of nursing, will speak about "Enhancing Your Well-Being Through Service" as part of Wellness Week Feb. 3 at 2 p.m. in 3211 ELWC.

Memmott will focus on the benefits that come both spiritually and psychologically from providing service and how service affects us physically, she said. Most of her presentation will draw on experiences she has had in Guatemala.

For the past five years Memmott has taken sixteen students to Guatemala in the summer and led them in working at local hospitals and clinics.

Memmott has been a professor of nursing at BYU for the past six years and has over twenty years of experience in the field.

She is the single mother of four children, all of whom have spent time in Guatemala with her.

"One year our entire family did the trip," Memmott said. "And even though it was rough, none wanted the experience to end. That's what happens when you're giving of yourself."

Cardiovascular Fitness and the 5 A Day Program

Eating five servings of fruits and vegetables a day and increasing physical activity are the keys to a healthier lifestyle as well as lowering risks for heart disease, one Wellness Week speaker says.

Heather Leonard, a registered dietitian from the Utah Department of Health, will speak about the importance of nutrition and exercise at the presentation "Cardiovascular Fitness and the Five-a-Day Program." Leonard's class is scheduled for Thursday at 10 a.m. in 3211 WSC.

"People can come a few steps closer to better cardiovascular health and quality of life," Leonard said. "Cardiovascular health is essential to have a better quality of life."

The five-a-day program is a national program to encourage people to eat five servings of fruits and vegetables a day. The cardiovascular program is part of the Utah Department of Health's efforts to increase cardiovascular health and decrease the risk of heart disease.

Heart disease is the number one killer for men and women in the state of Utah. However, it is one disease where risks can be successfully modified by changing a sedentary lifestyle.

Leonard said the cardiovascular health of Utahns is improving because they are eating better, but they're not fully aware of the risks of heart disease.

"They don't understand the impact of heart disease. People are more worried about cancer. Utahns need to know things have to be taken care of now, not later," she said.

Leonard has a BS in Nutrition and Food Science from Utah State University.

An Overview of Chronic Fatigue and Fibromyalgia Syndrome

"An Overview of Chronic Fatigue and Fibromyalgia Syndrome" will be presented by Dr. Landon Beals Thursday at 10 a.m. in the Varsity Theatre.

Beals, who is an attending physician in the BYU Student Health Clinic, will discuss the illnesses' symptoms and variations and how they impact people's lives.

Beals was born and raised in Salt Lake City. He graduated from Granite High School, attended the University of Utah and the University of Utah College of Medicine from the LDS Hospital in Salt Lake City where he served as Chief Medical Resident and Chief Resident.

His experience includes military service (rank of Major) and private practice of medicine. He has been an active member of the American Association for Chronic Fatigue Syndrome since 1994.

A Celebration of Women in Sports: A Panel by BYU's Women Athletes

BYU will be celebrating National Women in Sports Day on Thursday with a discussion panel. Ron Chamberlain, a sports psychologist at BYU, said many schools observe it.

"The NCAA asked us to do something on this day and it's something that we hope we can keep doing as a tradition at BYU," Chamberlain said.

The panel discussion will be Thursday at 11 a.m. in 3211 WSC and feature some of BYU's top women athletes. The panelists include Maren Hendershot, All-American soccer player, Hanalee Hawkins, swim team member, Hilary Johnson, gymnast, Amanda Covington, point guard for the basketball team, and Courtney Meldrum, cross country and track team member.

The moderator for the sports panel will be Barbara Lockhart, a physical education professor.

Lockhart has spent most of her life in sports. She was an speed skater at the 1960 and 1964 Winter Olympics. She has also seen the development and changes in women's sports.

"The visibility is different today. There are more opportunities and more scholarships available to women today," said Lockhart.

"It's hard to compete with the rest of the news and with men's sports, but women sports is starting to get more coverage," Lockhart said.

Lockhart said athletics help people.

"It helps build personal dedication. You have to spend a lot of time with sports. Most athletes are outstanding students," Lockhart said.

Seventy percent of BYU student-athletes have a grade point average over 3.2.

The panel discussion topics include lessons learned in sports, impact of sports on their life, challenges facing student-athletes, challenges for women athletes today, fondest sports memories and what the panelist will miss after graduation.

Body Acceptance

A seminar to help women overcome the Barbie Doll body image and accept their own will be taught Thursday in 3380 WSC at 2 p.m.

"Body Acceptance" will be taught by Shelia Mitchell, a graduate student studying marriage and family therapy.

"We need to realize that the messages the media sends us about how our bodies should look like are impossible," Mitchell said.

On Thursday in the Garden Court, various vendors will be setting up booths to offer advice and answer any questions students might have, said Conrad Todd, manager of physical education facilities.

Todd said that this year BYU tried to bring in vendors covering all aspects of wellness.

"Wellness isn't just physical," Todd said. "Wellness includes spiritual, intellectual, financial, social, and emotional wellness too."

The various vendors that will be at the Garden Court reflect this idea of complete wellness. The Financial Aid Office will there to offer advice and ideas to students on keeping ahead financially as well as other vendors including Outdoors Unmlimited, the Dietictics Department and VOICE.

Some of the off campus businesses that will be participating include Gold's Gym, chiropractic clinics, herbalists, the Red Cross, the Cancer Society, and others.

Even though the focus of wellness week is complete wellness, physical wellness is still one very important topic. For this reason there will be fitness testing in 3211 WSC on Thursday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The fitness testing is being run by Aaron Hardey, BYU's Wellness Coordinator.

"The fitness testing is a great way of seeing where you are at physically," Hardey said.

The fitness testing includes finding percent body fat, cardiovascular strength, overall strength and flexibility.

Fitness testing helps students to better set goals for themselves, Hardy said.

After taking the tests students can get advice on what they should do to decrease their body fat, lower their heart rate, or increase their strength or flexibility.

Everything You Wanted to Know About Pregnancy and Childbirth

Catherine Coverston, an assistant professor of nursing at BYU, is conducting a pregnancy panel Thursday at 7 p.m. in 3380 WSC.

Coverston will be speaking with Dr. Kari Lawrence and two midwives, Susan Chasson and Julie O'Neill, on different aspects of pregnancy and child birth. There will be a question and answer session following the speakers.

"We have a broad enough panel that we should be able to answer just about any question concerning pregnancy or child birth," Coverston said.

The main theme of the panel is to raise awareness. The panel will also present an array of labor and delivery options, said Coverston.

"We want to explain to people the steps necessary in order to have a healthy and happy experience," Coverston said.

Another Happy Couple

Christine and Thomas Bentley

Sierra West Jewelers turned out to be a great place for Tom and me to find our wedding rings! Not only did they offer an additional discount on the men's band, but also gave benefits for engagement pictures, tuxedo rentals, and invitation packages.

Besides devoting time for us while deciding on the right set for our needs, the Sierra West staff took further time to educate us about the diamond we were purchasing. They discussed the diamond's origin as well as its cut, color, and size.

Overall, we enjoyed our experience with Sierra West Jewelers and would definitely recommend their expertise and wide selection.

After all, your rings will last you for the rest of your life...

O'Neill will discuss pre-conception, healthy diets for women and aspects of child planning.

Chasson will address midwifery and how a home delivery can be more advantageous than a hospital visit with a doctor.

Lawrence will focus on high risk pregnancy factors including ailments or complications during pregnancy which necessitate a doctor rather than a midwife.

Coverston invites both men and women to attend the panel.

"It is important for men to know how best to support their wives during pregnancy. After all, it is a joint effort," Covertson said.

Because of specific inquiries, Dr. Joseph Bergeson is giving a lecture entitled "Black Health and Illness."

"Many people have asked for facts in regards to health care for blacks," Bergeson said. "However, the speech will not just pinpoint blacks. There's something for everyone."

Some of the health problems that effect blacks are high blood pressure, diabetes and sickle cell anemia. These topics will be dealt with specifically in Bergeson's lecture. The subject of medication will also be addressed.
